ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

Facial Recognition

- › The growth in electronic transactions results in great demand for fast and accurate user identification and authentication.
- › Remembering passwords / pins at times becomes a task as we tend to forget them if not used for a longer period, face recognition solves the problem easily as the user's face is the password.
- › Biometric is a unique, measurable characteristic of a human being that can be used to automatically recognize an individual or verify an individual's identity.

Fleet Management

Artificial Intelligence can be used to help fleet managers' decision making in two ways, by providing new insights and recommendations or automating decision making. AI and predictive analytics give drivers real-time weather, traffic and road condition data and identify the fastest route to their destination. The same technologies can help operations managers refine fleet-wide dispatching, allowing them to analyze and improve fleet activities and to quickly adjust time and delivery of goods and people when unplanned events occur.

Traffic Management System

- › To improve overall efficiency of transport AI is prime.
 - › Transport safety
 - › Transport productivity
 - › Transport reliability
 - › Informed travel choices

Waste Management

AI sensors are a vital improvement over traditional optic options. They can identify the type of material and take into account special considerations. New AI-powered technology helps recycling plants intelligently categorize different waste. The tech uses smart sensors and machine learning to rapidly identify what's on a conveyor belt. They can also sort through cardboard, plastics and non-recyclable objects. AI can improve operations in waste management companies and lighten the load on workers of goods and people when unplanned events occur.
